

WALDO IN ALL BOROUGHS

Makes Tour Friendly Visit and Not Sleuthing Expedition.

POLICE IN CHEERY MOOD

Expect Most General Promotion Order Issued in Long Time—No Trifling with New Boss.

Police Commissioner Waldo completed as busy a day as has fallen to the lot of any Commissioner in some time with a whirlwind tour of all five boroughs, starting from Police Headquarters at 9 o'clock last night.

With Chief Inspector Max Schmitzberger and Chief of Detectives Russell the new Commissioner left the Centre street building in Schmitzberger's automobile, going first to the Old Slip station. Then the trio made their way to the Harbor Squad station at Pier A, and after a brief inspection of the quarters there they boarded the ferry for Staten Island, going direct to the Stapleton station.

They left the Chief Inspector's car there and embarked on the police boat Patrol and landed on the government pier at Port Hamilton, from which they went to the Fort Hamilton station. Land and sea, so far, and still going, with Brooklyn, Queens, The Bronx, and part of Manhattan still ahead. They do say that Captain Barnett, at Stapleton station, on Staten Island, could hardly believe his eyes when Mr. Waldo walked into his station. A regular Police Commissioner making a night inspection trip on Staten Island struck them as almost beyond belief.

Over at the Fort Hamilton station the Commissioner's own car was waiting, and that the little touring party buzzed away to the Butler street station, in Flatbush. The Atlantic avenue station was next, and then the Brownsville station, the busiest in the city.

The Long Island City station, where a Lieutenant Frank Peabody, soon to be a captain, is stationed, was the only Queens Borough house called upon, and then the Commissioner's car and party shot along over the Queensboro Bridge and up to Harlem, where they dropped in on Captain Thomas W. Walsh, at the East 128th street station. From there they took a flying leap up to the Alexander avenue station, in The Bronx, and then back down to call on Captain John J. Barrett, at the West 125th street station.

The Tenderloin station, in West 30th street, was the last port of call, and that was reached after midnight. Only a brief stop at each station was on the programme, and the Commissioner endeavored to make it a friendly visit and not a sleuthing expedition of criticism.

Tour Called New Record.

Altogether he covered something like fifty miles, by land and sea, and established what is believed to be a new record for a Police Commissioner, in that he visited and inspected stations in each of the five boroughs of the greater city upon the same night and tour.

Commissioner Waldo put in most of the earlier part of his second day in his new job reading up on the details of the work of promotion left over to him by Mr. Crospay. These advances, which are scheduled to be officially made on Monday, will constitute one of the most general promotion orders the department has seen for some time, and the police officers of all grades are in a cheerful mood.

The new Commissioner found time, however, to drop into the trial room at headquarters, where thirty-eight policemen were up on various charges, mostly for being off post or missing rollcalls. Deputy Commissioner Walsh had disposed of about ten cases when Mr. Waldo came in and took up the next half dozen himself. In each case he imposed the maximum penalty for the offence charged. It was learned yesterday that the new police head's views about the trials of his men are summed up in the idea that he will give them every possible benefit of the doubt, but will impose the maximum penalty when their guilt is established to his satisfaction.

Patrolman William T. Gatewood, of the West 68th street station, found this out to his cost, when he testified that he had been attending to the complaint of a citizen at the moment he was charged with being absent from post. Gatewood had a freeman in uniform on hand to testify that he (the policeman) had been passing in front of the engine house, a part of his regular beat, during one part of the time he was charged with being absent. However, the sergeant who made the charge against Gatewood was able to testify that he also had been on the spot named by Gatewood at the time the policeman specified, and that Gatewood was not there.

"You are fined ten days' pay," was the Commissioner's verdict, and the policemen in the room decided that there could not be any trifling with the new boss.

The Commissioner finished his day with another interview with the Mayor, but as they came out of the Mayor's office together neither had anything to say on political matters. Mayor Gaynor, in answer to a question as to the appointment of a Fire Commissioner to succeed Mr. Waldo, said he would not attend to that matter until Monday, and when the question of Deputy Commissioner Lusk's probable retirement from the department was broached the Mayor laughingly declared that "it was up to Waldo."

But the new Commissioner had nothing to say about his deputies, and the two men walked out of the City Hall together, headed for the Brooklyn Bridge, which structure, the Mayor said, they were going to walk across together.

G. W. MONROE AND WIFE PARTED

Facts Come Out in Notice Actor Publishes in Newspaper.

The following notice, which has appeared in a Jamaica (Long Island) newspaper, is causing much comment among the friends of George W. Monroe, the actor, and his wife:

To Whom It May Concern: Notice is hereby given that George W. Monroe is living separately and apart from his wife, Anna P. Monroe, and all his family, and that the debts contracted by her, as he is at the present time paying her for the separate support of herself and child.

GEORGE W. MONROE.

Mrs. Monroe, who with her mother, Mrs. Ryan, and her daughter, Virginia, nine years old, is living in a fine home near Jamaica, said yesterday she knew of no reason why her husband should have caused the notice to be inserted. She said she was not contracting any debts and did not intend to do so. She also said there had been no legal separation, merely a mutual one. At the present time she is supporting her son, a week for the support of herself and child, which she believed was not sufficient. Her husband, who is at the present time with a company in the "Grand Opera House," was to collect $100 a week salary.

Miss Monroe said her husband seemed quiet because his niece, Miss Georgia Monroe, lived with them.

Mrs. Monroe, "the lady" some years ago, "My Aunt Bridget," when Monroe was the leading man in the play, she was eighteen years old when she married Mr. Monroe.

GAYNOR IMPERVIOUS TO DIN

LUMSDEN PLEADS GUILTY NOW.

After fighting to the Court of Appeals for the reversal of his conviction for manslaughter for the killing of Harry B. Suydam, a stock broker, John C. Lumden pleaded guilty at his second trial in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court yesterday.

Commissioner Martin W. Littleton, his attorney, explained to Justice McCall that the health of his client had been undermined by his stay in prison and that also he wished to save the county the expense of another trial and throw himself on the mercy of the court. Lumden, who had received a sentence of eighteen years on the first conviction, was handling the vice situation at Coney Island.

PHELPS LAWSUIT UP AGAIN

Argument on Couple's Agreement to Share Income of $38,000.

Judge Giesinger heard argument yesterday and reserved decision on a motion made in behalf of Charles Harris Phelps for the continuance of the injunction he obtained to restrain the United States Trust Company from paying to his wife, Mrs. Eleanor Livingston Phelps, the income from the estate of her father, John A. Peil, half of which she had signed over to her husband in an agreement made in 1888. This income amounts to $38,000.

Mr. Phelps continued to pay the money over to his husband for several years and then repudiated the agreement by saying that she signed it under duress. Phelps makes no claim to her son before he turned two years old and who was in the custody of the father.

Counsel for Phelps said yesterday that Mrs. Phelps had waited many years before she alleged duress and that he would submit to the court thirty-one letters written by Mrs. Phelps to her husband during the time that she was allowing him the income under the agreement. Counsel for Mrs. Phelps argued that the agreement could not be enforced by the court. He said that the original agreement was made in 1888. Mr. Peil, father of Mrs. Phelps, did not die until 1903, and that the latter pledged herself before she got the property.

Dear Mr. Loder: Your letter is at hand, and I thank you for your kind wishes.

GARDEN PARTY OF THE ARMY RELIEF SOCIETY AT GOVERNOR'S ISLAND.

REGULARS ON THE FIRING LINE IN AN ATTACK ON THE FORT.

REAR ADMIRAL LEUTZE, OF THE NAVY YARD.

Walton in All Boroughs

Makes Tour Friendly Visit and

Not Sleuthing Expedition.

POLICE IN CHEERY MOOD

Expect Most General Promotion

Order Issued in Long Time—

No Trifling with New Boss.

Police Commissioner Waldo completed as busy a day as has fallen to the lot of any Commissioner in some time with a whirlwind tour of all five boroughs, starting from Police Headquarters at 9 o'clock last night.

With Chief Inspector Max Schmitzberger and Chief of Detectives Russell the new Commissioner left the Centre street building in Schmitzberger's automobile, going first to the Old Slip station. Then the trio made their way to the Harbor Squad station at Pier A, and after a brief inspection of the quarters there they boarded the ferry for Staten Island, going direct to the Stapleton station.

They left the Chief Inspector's car there and embarked on the police boat Patrol and landed on the government pier at Port Hamilton, from which they went to the Fort Hamilton station. Land and sea, so far, and still going, with Brooklyn, Queens, The Bronx, and part of Manhattan still ahead. They do say that Captain Barnett, at Stapleton station, on Staten Island, could hardly believe his eyes when Mr. Waldo walked into his station. A regular Police Commissioner making a night inspection trip on Staten Island struck them as almost beyond belief.

Over at the Fort Hamilton station the Commissioner's own car was waiting, and that the little touring party buzzed away to the Butler street station, in Flatbush. The Atlantic avenue station was next, and then the Brownsville station, the busiest in the city.

The Long Island City station, where a Lieutenant Frank Peabody, soon to be a captain, is stationed, was the only Queens Borough house called upon, and then the Commissioner's car and party shot along over the Queensboro Bridge and up to Harlem, where they dropped in on Captain Thomas W. Walsh, at the East 128th street station. From there they took a flying leap up to the Alexander avenue station, in The Bronx, and then back down to call on Captain John J. Barrett, at the West 125th street station.

The Tenderloin station, in West 30th street, was the last port of call, and that was reached after midnight. Only a brief stop at each station was on the programme, and the Commissioner endeavored to make it a friendly visit and not a sleuthing expedition of criticism.

Tour Called New Record.

Altogether he covered something like fifty miles, by land and sea, and established what is believed to be a new record for a Police Commissioner, in that he visited and inspected stations in each of the five boroughs of the greater city upon the same night and tour.

Commissioner Waldo put in most of the earlier part of his second day in his new job reading up on the details of the work of promotion left over to him by Mr. Crospay. These advances, which are scheduled to be officially made on Monday, will constitute one of the most general promotion orders the department has seen for some time, and the police officers of all grades are in a cheerful mood.

The new Commissioner found time, however, to drop into the trial room at headquarters, where thirty-eight policemen were up on various charges, mostly for being off post or missing rollcalls. Deputy Commissioner Walsh had disposed of about ten cases when Mr. Waldo came in and took up the next half dozen himself. In each case he imposed the maximum penalty for the offence charged. It was learned yesterday that the new police head's views about the trials of his men are summed up in the idea that he will give them every possible benefit of the doubt, but will impose the maximum penalty when their guilt is established to his satisfaction.

Patrolman William T. Gatewood, of the West 68th street station, found this out to his cost, when he testified that he had been attending to the complaint of a citizen at the moment he was charged with being absent from post. Gatewood had a freeman in uniform on hand to testify that he (the policeman) had been passing in front of the engine house, a part of his regular beat, during one part of the time he was charged with being absent. However, the sergeant who made the charge against Gatewood was able to testify that he also had been on the spot named by Gatewood at the time the policeman specified, and that Gatewood was not there.

"You are fined ten days' pay," was the Commissioner's verdict, and the policemen in the room decided that there could not be any trifling with the new boss.

The Commissioner finished his day with another interview with the Mayor, but as they came out of the Mayor's office together neither had anything to say on political matters. Mayor Gaynor, in answer to a question as to the appointment of a Fire Commissioner to succeed Mr. Waldo, said he would not attend to that matter until Monday, and when the question of Deputy Commissioner Lusk's probable retirement from the department was broached the Mayor laughingly declared that "it was up to Waldo."

But the new Commissioner had nothing to say about his deputies, and the two men walked out of the City Hall together, headed for the Brooklyn Bridge, which structure, the Mayor said, they were going to walk across together.

G. W. MONROE AND WIFE PARTED

Facts Come Out in Notice Actor Publishes in Newspaper.

The following notice, which has appeared in a Jamaica (Long Island) newspaper, is causing much comment among the friends of George W. Monroe, the actor, and his wife:

To Whom It May Concern: Notice is hereby given that George W. Monroe is living separately and apart from his wife, Anna P. Monroe, and all his family, and that the debts contracted by her, as he is at the present time paying her for the separate support of herself and child.

GEORGE W. MONROE.

Mrs. Monroe, who with her mother, Mrs. Ryan, and her daughter, Virginia, nine years old, is living in a fine home near Jamaica, said yesterday she knew of no reason why her husband should have caused the notice to be inserted. She said she was not contracting any debts and did not intend to do so. She also said there had been no legal separation, merely a mutual one. At the present time she is supporting her son, a week for the support of herself and child, which she believed was not sufficient. Her husband, who is at the present time with a company in the "Grand Opera House," was to collect $100 a week salary.

Miss Monroe said her husband seemed quiet because his niece, Miss Georgia Monroe, lived with them.

Mrs. Monroe, "the lady" some years ago, "My Aunt Bridget," when Monroe was the leading man in the play, she was eighteen years old when she married Mr. Monroe.

GAYNOR IMPERVIOUS TO DIN

LUMSDEN PLEADS GUILTY NOW.

After fighting to the Court of Appeals for the reversal of his conviction for manslaughter for the killing of Harry B. Suydam, a stock broker, John C. Lumden pleaded guilty at his second trial in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court yesterday.

Commissioner Martin W. Littleton, his attorney, explained to Justice McCall that the health of his client had been undermined by his stay in prison and that also he wished to save the county the expense of another trial and throw himself on the mercy of the court. Lumden, who had received a sentence of eighteen years on the first conviction, was handling the vice situation at Coney Island.

PHELPS LAWSUIT UP AGAIN

Argument on Couple's Agreement to Share Income of $38,000.

Judge Giesinger heard argument yesterday and reserved decision on a motion made in behalf of Charles Harris Phelps for the continuance of the injunction he obtained to restrain the United States Trust Company from paying to his wife, Mrs. Eleanor Livingston Phelps, the income from the estate of her father, John A. Peil, half of which she had signed over to her husband in an agreement made in 1888. This income amounts to $38,000.

Mr. Phelps continued to pay the money over to his husband for several years and then repudiated the agreement by saying that she signed it under duress. Phelps makes no claim to her son before he turned two years old and who was in the custody of the father.

Counsel for Phelps said yesterday that Mrs. Phelps had waited many years before she alleged duress and that he would submit to the court thirty-one letters written by Mrs. Phelps to her husband during the time that she was allowing him the income under the agreement. Counsel for Mrs. Phelps argued that the agreement could not be enforced by the court. He said that the original agreement was made in 1888. Mr. Peil, father of Mrs. Phelps, did not die until 1903, and that the latter pledged herself before she got the property.

Dear Mr. Loder: Your letter is at hand, and I thank you for your kind wishes.

POLICE IN CHEERY MOOD

Expect Most General Promotion

Order Issued in Long Time—

No Trifling with New Boss.

Police Commissioner Waldo completed as busy a day as has fallen to the lot of any Commissioner in some time with a whirlwind tour of all five boroughs, starting from Police Headquarters at 9 o'clock last night.

With Chief Inspector Max Schmitzberger and Chief of Detectives Russell the new Commissioner left the Centre street building in Schmitzberger's automobile, going first to the Old Slip station. Then the trio made their way to the Harbor Squad station at Pier A, and after a brief inspection of the quarters there they boarded the ferry for Staten Island, going direct to the Stapleton station.

They left the Chief Inspector's car there and embarked on the police boat Patrol and landed on the government pier at Port Hamilton, from which they went to the Fort Hamilton station. Land and sea, so far, and still going, with Brooklyn, Queens, The Bronx, and part of Manhattan still ahead. They do say that Captain Barnett, at Stapleton station, on Staten Island, could hardly believe his eyes when Mr. Waldo walked into his station. A regular Police Commissioner making a night inspection trip on Staten Island struck them as almost beyond belief.

Over at the Fort Hamilton station the Commissioner's own car was waiting, and that the little touring party buzzed away to the Butler street station, in Flatbush. The Atlantic avenue station was next, and then the Brownsville station, the busiest in the city.

The Long Island City station, where a Lieutenant Frank Peabody, soon to be a captain, is stationed, was the only Queens Borough house called upon, and then the Commissioner's car and party shot along over the Queensboro Bridge and up to Harlem, where they dropped in on Captain Thomas W. Walsh, at the East 128th street station. From there they took a flying leap up to the Alexander avenue station, in The Bronx, and then back down to call on Captain John J. Barrett, at the West 125th street station.

The Tenderloin station, in West 30th street, was the last port of call, and that was reached after midnight. Only a brief stop at each station was on the programme, and the Commissioner endeavored to make it a friendly visit and not a sleuthing expedition of criticism.

Tour Called New Record.

Altogether he covered something like fifty miles, by land and sea, and established what is believed to be a new record for a Police Commissioner, in that he visited and inspected stations in each of the five boroughs of the greater city upon the same night and tour.

Commissioner Waldo put in most of the earlier part of his second day in his new job reading up on the details of the work of promotion left over to him by Mr. Crospay. These advances, which are scheduled to be officially made on Monday, will constitute one of the most general promotion orders the department has seen for some time, and the police officers of all grades are in a cheerful mood.

The new Commissioner found time, however, to drop into the trial room at headquarters, where thirty-eight policemen were up on various charges, mostly for being off post or missing rollcalls. Deputy Commissioner Walsh had disposed of about ten cases when Mr. Waldo came in and took up the next half dozen himself. In each case he imposed the maximum penalty for the offence charged. It was learned yesterday that the new police head's views about the trials of his men are summed up in the idea that he will give them every possible benefit of the doubt, but will impose the maximum penalty when their guilt is established to his satisfaction.

Patrolman William T. Gatewood, of the West 68th street station, found this out to his cost, when he testified that he had been attending to the complaint of a citizen at the moment he was charged with being absent from post. Gatewood had a freeman in uniform on hand to testify that he (the policeman) had been passing in front of the engine house, a part of his regular beat, during one part of the time he was charged with being absent. However, the sergeant who made the charge against Gatewood was able to testify that he also had been on the spot named by